2. Each public security sub-bureau had jurisdiction over various sub-stations (3175/0427/2076). The sub-stations had direct contact with and controlled the people. They were organized as follows:
 - a. Each sub-station had a chief with four sections under his control. They were the Registration Section, the Public Security Section, the Civil Section, and the Communication Section.
 - b. Street and lane offices were under the command of the sub-stations. Each of these offices had one staff member and two or three clerks. The Public Security Group, the Sanitary Group, and the Women's Group each consisted of one member who was elected by the residents under the jurisdiction of the sub-station.
3. The Chinese Communist Canton Municipal Government has jurisdiction over the district governments. After the reorganization of the public security sub-bureaus, the number, jurisdictions, and titles of the administrative units remained the same, with the words, "district government," being added.
